ABSTRACT:
The traces of Brahui Journalism are found in the middle age/era of Brahui literature which is described to be closely associated with the literature as the promotion of Brahui literature besides publication of different material i.e. pamphlets, booklets and books had through the journalism especially the print media that boosted literature in a way that could be done through the other conventional sources. Brahui literature and journalism took a new shape in the modern era as Brahui writers used the platform of print media particularly the magazines being published not only in Brahui but also in Sindhi, Balochi and Urdu languages. Besides individual efforts, the Tribal Publicity Organization, electronic media and the Brahui literature organizations also played pivotal role in promotion of Brahui literature and Journalism. The researchers on Brahui literature have different thoughts about the eras of Brahui literature. Dr. Abdur Rahman Brahui and Noor Muhammad Parwana had spread it into four eras while Sosan Brahui and Saleh Muhammad Shad describe this into three eras. Sosan stretch out Brahui eras as i) Folk literature; ii) Ancient; and iii) Modern literature while Shad ranges it as i) Ancient age; ii) middle age – 1770-1960 and iii) Modern age – 1960 – to-date. (Shad: 1986) However, most of the Brahui writers have a unanimous consensus that the Brahui literature covers four eras. Through this study, the Brahui Journalism and its role in promoting the Brahui literature has been focused.
Al-Haq being the first magazine of Brahuì had begun publication in 1923 under the editorship of Maulana Muhammad Umer Deenai. It had not continued publishing for long time. During the 1950s Brahuì writers took benefit of publishing their creations to express their views and enlighten the Brahuì-speaking people about their social and economic ups and downs through articles and poetry in Sindhi, Balochi or Urdu magazines. These newspapers and magazines had some columns or pages specified for Brahuì language but there was no full-fledged newspaper or magazine. Brahuì writers had to wait until 1960, when late Noor Muhammad Parwana started the first newspaper Brahuì ‘Eilum’ on 24th February 1960 as a fortnightly, the representative newspaper of Brahuì literature and language, culture and heritage.

The credit for introducing Brahuì journalism on regular basis goes to the Baba-e-Brahuì Sahafat, late Noor Muhammad Parwana. He started publishing fortnightly ‘Eilum’ with a missionary zeal to promote Brahuì language and literature through journalism. He rendered untiring efforts in this regard as a result of that the Brahuì literature might attain visible status in the present day status. ‘Eilum’ was the platform for Brahuì writers who fought for recognition of their language. It introduced the Brahuì language through the electronic media. ‘Eilum’ which turned into a newspaper set new trends in Brahuì literature. Scholars describe the newspaper as a milestone for Brahuì literature and term this as a source for Brahuì language and literature. Brahuì scholars also recognize without ‘Eilum’, the modern era of Brahuì language and literature incomplete.

‘Eilum’ about two years after commencing its publication in 1960, turned into a weekly and is still publishing with the same spirit and enthusiasm for the promotion of Brahuì language and literature. More than 60 special editions of ‘Eilum’ have been published denoting the literature, religious, political and social figures. ‘Eilum’’s beginning remained a literary and informative newspaper with political intentions. (Parwana: 1998)

‘Eilum’ waged a war through editorials, columns and news demanding for inclusion of Brahuì language among other languages. It continued the struggle till the concerned quarters
In the editorial of 17th December 1964 issue, 'Eilum' hailed the decision of the Tribal Publicity and Publication Department, Government of Pakistan for acknowledging Brahui as a regional language. (Editorial, weekly Eilum Mastung-Pakistan, 17th December 1964).

'Eilum' also fought for extension of Brahui programmes' duration on Radio. It published a number of editorials in support of this demand. Radio Pakistan following introduction of Radio programmes in 1957, gave only 15 minutes to Brahui language but after pressing demand through 'Eilum', the duration of Brahui programme was extended from 15 to 45 minutes on 25th December 1964. 'Eilum' praised the decision of the high ups of Radio Pakistan saying that Radio Pakistan has taken a step of great appreciation acknowledging the longstanding demand of about 1.4 to 1.5 million Brahui speaking people. (Editorial; weekly Eilum Mastung-Pakistan, 3rd January 1965).

In 1965, the monthly magazine 'Ulus' being published by Tribal Publicity Organisation started publishing Brahui articles while in 1975, the same Organisation started publishing monthly Brahui magazine 'Awaal' which was later discontinued in 1979. (Brahui: 1972)

Prominent among the newspapers and magazine accommodated contributions in Brahui language are Al-Haneef, Young Baloch, Sada-e-Balochistan, Nawa-e-Bolan, Khawar, Eisar, Nawa-e-Watan, Muhalim, Balochi Karachi and Karkun Quetta.

In March 1981, Brahui Publications Fareedabad began a quarterly Brahui magazine 'Sangat' from Meharah of District Dadu Sindh, which was discontinued after publishing its 17th edition in December 1990. The foundation of Brahui Publication was laid in 1975 as 'Noori Naseer Khan Brahui Publication but in 1976, this first Brahui Publication institution in Sindh was renamed as 'Brahui Publication'. Keeping in view the requirements of Sindh, the orthography of publications from this institute was in typed form which was a great success in the Brahui literature as many of the literary person had of the view that Brahui language could not be printed in typed form. (Brahui: 1981)

In April 1984, Brahui Adabi Society Pakistan, Quetta started publishing a quarterly magazine 'Day Tik' which after publication of five editions was discontinued due to financial constraints. Afzal Murad Rana, the first Editor of ‘Day Tik’ which began publishing again after a 15-year gap in 1989 under the supervision of Abdul Qayyum Bedar, edited by Waheed Zaheer. It continued publishing till 1991 and got closed down due to the same problem. In 1998, ‘Day Tik’ started publication with a renewed pledge by the members of the Society. Nowadays, Afzal Murad is editing ‘Day Tik’ under the supervision of Abdul Qayyum Bedar. (Bedar: 1999)

TRIBAL PUBLICITY ORGANISATION:

The first drama session...
Radio ‘Bhut Pirghok’, the Brahui translation by Yousafsani Sasoli of an Urdu drama ‘Bhut Shakan’ written by Mehshar Rasoolnagri was aired on 30th June 1966 while the first drama written in Brahui was ‘Giddan’ by Ghulam Nabi Rahee broadcast on 30th March 1967. Nowadays, besides Quetta, Radio Pakistan Khuzdar is also broadcasting Brahui programmes on daily basis. (Gul: 2000)

As mentioned, ‘Eilum’ the only Brahui weekly newspaper had rendered a great struggle for increase in the duration of Brahui programmes on Radio and achieved the task for more time on Radio with recognition of the importance of Brahui language.

Pakistan Television, Quetta Center started transmissions on 24th November 1974 while the first Brahui programme, a humorous skit ‘Hanain Kharain’ was televised on 26th November 1974. PTV Quetta started telecasting Brahui dramas in 1975. The first Brahui drama was ‘Num, Num, Oh’ written by Ghulam Haider Hasrat. Since then, Pakistan Television Quetta Center is telecasting different Brahui programmes including musical shows, literary programmes, Mushaira and talks, stage shows etc. on regular basis.

LITERARY ORGANIZATIONS:

Before independence of Pakistan, Maktaba-e-Durkhani was serving as the lone literary organization for the promotion of Brahui language and literature but after inception of Pakistan, it took 12 years when the first formal literary organization was formed in 1959. Brahui literary organisations have remarkable contributions in introducing not only the ancient but the modern trends of Brahui literature in the society.

Brahui Adabi Board was the first literary institution formed on 4th November 1959 under the patronage of Noor Muhammad Parwana and Sardar Dost Muhammad Satakzai. Sardar Satakzai had to arrange the primary sittings of the Board at his home attended by all of the Brahui scholars and poets of that time. In 1966, the Board was renamed as Brahui Adabi Deewan with Sardar Dost Muhammad Satakzai as the Convenor and Nawab Ghaus Bakhsh Khan Raisani as its acting Convenor while Noor Muhammad Parwana was assigned the Secretary-ship of Deewan. The other members were Abdul Qadir Aseer Shahwani, Muhammad Zuberani, Ghulam Sarwar Sarpara, Rehmatullah Shah, Muhammad Khan Mengal, Yar Muhammad Hazeen, Noor Muhammad Raisani Nauhisari, Yousaf Aziz Shahwani, Hakeem Khudai Raza Mengal, Mir Ahmed Shah Lehri, Hakeem Zikar Mengal, Rais Nabib Dad, Lango and Mehhood Ali Pandrani. (Aseer: 1994)

Brahui Association Wara: In 1964, the Brahui literary persons formed an association in District Larkana of Sindh province named as Brahui Association Wara which rendered efforts for the promotion of Brahui language and literature. It did not remain on the canvas for much time. Noor Muhammad Raisani Nauhisari, Yousaf Aziz Shahwani, Hakeem Khudai Raza Mengal, Mir Ahmed Shah Lehri, Hakeem Zikar Mengal, Rais Nabib Dad, Lango and Mehhood Ali Pandrani. (Aseer: 1994)

Brahui Academy Pakistan, Quetta was found on 7th July 1968. Mubeen Azam Mazari Advocate was its first President while Muhammad Khan Raisani, the Vice President and Ghulam Haider Haider was its first General Secretary. In its first session that elected its cabinet was attended by Mubeen Azam Mazari Advocate, Bashir Ahmed Lehri, Yar. Muhammad Hazeeq Amanullah Rind, Musa Toor, Abdul Ghafoor Durkhani, Hakeem Khudai Raza Mengal, Rais Nabib Dad and Ghulam Haider Hasrat.

The Brahui Academy has published a number of books covering different literary aspects. It gave boost to the promotion of Brahui language and literature through publication of a number of religious, poetic, grammar as well as the research on Brahui language and literature. The research work on Brahui language and literature done by Dr. Abbeer Rahman Brahui is worth mentioning as he had made a remarkable job in exploring the ancient poetry and folk songs, life history and achievements of the early Brahui writers and compiled these in books published by Brahui Academy and other publishing houses.

Nowadays, Brahui Academy has widened its network to the other parts of the province and set up its chapters in Soorab, Kalat, Khuzdar and Nushki.
Brahui Adabi Society Pakistan, Quetta was established on 31st March 1978 by the young writers with its founder Chairman, Khudaaidad Gul. The first Vice Chairman of the Society was Abdul Wahab Hamdam while the other office bearers included Muhammad Ayub Alam, General Secretary, Mehmood Khan, Joint Secretary, Muhammad Rafiq Qaim, Secretary Information and Abdul Qayyum Bedar, Treasurer. The other founding members of the Society were Sher Muhammad Eilum, Rasool Shah Babay and Muhammad Rafiq Fazil. Besides Khudaaidad Gul, Dr. Zardar Razzak Sabir, Waheed Zaheer and Arif Zia were remained the chairman of the Society while Abdul Qayyum Bedar is the existing chairman. Brahui Adabi Society.

The elder writers of Brahui including Professor Nadir Qambrani, Dr. Muhammad Parwana, Dr. Abdur Rahman Brahui, Ahmed Din Ahmad and Ghulam Nabi Raheee fully patronized and guided these young writers who later proved themselves capable to render valuable services in the promotion of Brahui language and literature. Society has so far published more than 50 books.

Society began publishing a quarterly magazine ‘Day Tik’ in April 1984 edited by Afzal Murad and supervised by Dr. Abdur Razzak Sabir. After publication of five editions, it was discontinued due to financial constraints. ‘Day Tik’ started publishing again in 1989 edited by Waheed Zaheer and supervised by Abdul Qayyum Baider and continued till 1991. Close of ‘Day Tik’ took place due to the same financial problems.

Society members in 1998 had resumed the publication of ‘Day for the third time which had continued till 2003 without any gap under the patronage of Abdul Qayyum Bedar with Afzal Murad, Haneef Mir and Waheed Zaheer its editors of different issues. ‘Day Tik’ has come publishing in book shape in 2004, 2005 and 2006 devoted to the literary giants including Abdul Jabbar Yar, Dr. Abdul Rahman Brahui and Professor Nadir Qambrani.

Brahui Adabi Society has now branches in Khuzdar, Matung, Jut and Soorab where their members are engaged in literary activities creations. (Bedar: 1999)

This is a recognized fact that art and literature has a signifying role that takes effective part in the formation of social ideology as well as other social practice full of experiments of life by the individual and different segments of society. The efforts on the platform of literature for linguistic meanings, explanation and justification of the creation intentionally or unintentionally are also linked with the struggle of life and war for reign. In Balochistan, from the era of Noori Naseer Khan the forced induction of Kalat State with Pakistan, similar ideological formation efforts were continued backed by the ruler class for stabilizing their political regime and economic interests. They taking cover of islamic injunctions and united Baloch nations or united State, struggled for supremacy. Influence on literature right from Malik Dad Khan ‘Tohfatul Ajaib’ or poetry of Reki and Basham till the religious literature created by Maktaba-e-Durkhani, the efforts of ideological formation and stability of Noori Naseer’s regime or the united Baloch nations continued. But, following the British rulers take over on Balochistan capitalists influence, establishment of social organisations, communication means, setting up of commercial institutions introduction of modern education resulted start of disaster of feudalism along with the semi-tribal and semi-feudal system.

With change in socio-cultural and economic set up, establishment of business installations, educational institutions, publishing house, beginning of broadcasting and telecasting in Balochistan, the old feudal social relations were replaced with modernized capitalist relations.

Educational institutions played vital role in creating a middle class educated segment and a number of social, cultural and literary centers. Brahui language thronged on the canvas. The main centers include Quetta, Mastung, Nushki, Kalat and Khuzdar where Brahui newspaper, literary organizations and institutions and the electronic media provided sound base to the modern Brahui literature.

Before independence of Pakistan, Brahui literature was dominated with religious preaching while in the fourth era progressive though witnessed till the Martial Law regime of Ayub Khan. All the progressive writers promoted nationalism with the idea of united Baloch but it took surprising turn when ideology of Pakistan and other related subjects started influence on literature.
Brahui writers and poets through their regional literature played a crucial role in the formation and promotion of the ideology of Pakistan. A number of articles and poetic creations are witnessed highlighting national integration by a number of writers both religious and progressive-minded who contributed to this effect.
